WELCOME to 22nd DigiCon6 ASIA

Everybody in the world is now living their days in a state of great worry. We have been robbed of our freedom by an enemy we can not see. We quake in fear of an unknown virus. We live in a surreal world we have never experienced, but the season arrives like it always does. No, I should correct myself about never having experienced it before. Man must have had to worry about disasters since ancient times. I believe that people thousand of years ago trembled in fear of nature' s threat and infectious disease, just like us now. I can have hope, as that is how the world has continued. That is how the world has continued and will go on continuing.

Even if I knew that the world will go to pieces tomorrow,
I would still plant my apple tree. Martin Luther

These are the words of the German professor of theology who lived more than 500 years ago. Europe was gripped by the plague then. In the current world of globalization, the world edges in a direction opposite to that of diversity. The threat to society and the weakness of the individual - that is the same now as in the past. While we bear with an uncertain future that we cannot see, we believe in the future and build a world. That is the activity of "building" and what it must mean to plant an apple tree. I once again looked at "Another World," the work that won the Grand Prize at the 21st DigiCon6 ASIA. Suddenly my eyes began to fill with tears. How a work appears can change dramatically depending on the situation faced by the viewer. While the creator' s intention remains unchanged, a person' s interpretation can change and the film gains additional meaning together with the landscape and the air. A work is reborn inside the viewer, and continues to live. I look forward to seeing your works.
